GGWP

I am a gamer. I've been playing video games ever since 6 years ago when my friend convinced me to start League of Legends, a MOBA that took entered the world with a bang. From League, I branched out into many different types of games and realized one big problem: there isn't a site that honestly reviews video games and keeps them up to date. In order to find accurate information, the user has to go through countless numbers of blogs and videos to figure out an overall rating of a game. So for this final project, I have decided to create a platform in which I can write about my own opinions while pulling together other people's review and compiling them so users can access the information easily. The website will be kept up to date will all patch notes and remakes since games change drastically with each changes.

For GGWP (common term gamers use to show respect for the enemy team) I am going to focus on monochromatic colors. Since most tech users enjoy 'Night Mode' I am going to have a dark background for the majority of the pages with a splash of color using images. Above is an example of my home page: the logo will serve as the 'Home' button and a simple navigation bar on the right-hand side. From the UX perspective, I am not too sure as to how well a side navigation bar will work out especially since the words are angled as well.
